Median rent edged higher year over year for the third time in four months.

Median rent continued to grind higher nearly every month as new lease signings and listing inventory remained elevated. The median rent edged 0.2% higher year over year to $4,250, an April record. The net effective median rent, the median rent less landlord concessions, was $4,220, up 0.4%, and a new

April high. The average rent per square foot was $84.80 per year, 6.5% more than last year's period, and it was less impacted by the 10.6% drop in average rental size than the average rent. New lease signings remained ferocious, surging 41.7% annually to 5,482, the second-highest April on record. The lease signings expansion was enabled because of the gains in listing inventory, up 22.7% to 7,996. The share of landlord concessions was 11.8%, down from 12.9% last year. When a concession was paid, the average amount remained at one month's equivalent rent since November. The market share of bidding wars, a proxy for new leases signed above the landlord's asking price, was 21.2%, the highest level in nearly two years, with an average premium of 10.8%. Smaller apartments tended to have more bidding wars, with studios seeing a 22.2% share and three bedrooms having a 16.3% share.
